OVERVIEW

UNFPA in Indonesia: an overview of our Eighth Country Programme 2011–2015

UNFPA, the United Nations Population Fund, delivers a world where every pregnancy is wanted, every birth is safe, and every young person's potential is fulfilled. For over 40 years, assisting Indonesia towards this goal has been a priority for UNFPA.

The Eighth Country Programme (CP8) 2011–2015 provides a dynamic framework for UNFPA's engagement in Indonesia. Tapping into UNFPA's expertise and experiences, support is given to national partners in nine priority output areas:

- integrating population dynamics in development planning
- advocating for International Conference of Population and Development principles (ICPD) and South-South Cooperation
- enhancing universal access to reproductive health
- responding in a humanitarian emergency
- revitalizing family planning
- preventing the sexual transmission of HIV
- promoting gender equality
- empowering young people
- optimizing the use of population data

There are integral links between these programme output areas—widening access to reproductive health and voluntary family planning shapes population trends and strongly influences gender equality. Strengthening youth participation and leadership, while addressing youth issues is an important element across the output areas. Emphasizing these strong links ensures that the Eighth Country Programme is streamlined, comprehensively supporting Indonesia's development and the well-being of its people. UNFPA's partnership with the Government of Indonesia to achieve these programme outputs will be further elaborated in the following pages.

As Indonesia rapidly evolves, UNFPA stands ready to support the nation's changing needs. The Eighth Country Programme strongly aligns with the Government of Indonesia's development priorities and supports the National Medium-Term Development Plan (RPJMN 2010–2014). It is guided by the outcomes of the United Nations Partnership for Development Framework (UNPDF), which ensures strong collaboration within the UN family. UNFPA strives to ensure aid effectiveness, recognizing the Paris Declaration and the Jakarta Commitment. Principles of national ownership and sustainability are strongly reflected in the CP8.

Indonesia's emergence as a middle-income country means that UNFPA is changing the way it works in a country that no longer requires service delivery support. UNFPA works at the strategic level with the Government of Indonesia, emphasizing capacity strengthening and policy dialogue. UNFPA delivers through strong partnerships with government counterparts, academic institutions, NGOs and civil society organizations. Supporting the most vulnerable people in society and reducing inequity are at the heart of UNFPA's approach.

UNFPA supports the Government of Indonesia to use a rights-based, gender-sensitive approach that is anchored in the principles agreed at the International Conference of Population and Development (ICPD). Achieving the goals of the Eighth Country Programme will strongly contribute to Indonesia's achievement of development targets, including Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and unfinished ICPD goals.

UNFPA will continue to support the Government of Indonesia in its leadership role in defining the Post-2015 Development Agenda. UNFPA's core values—youth empowerment, population and development, sexual and reproductive health, including family planning, and gender equality—are integral to sustainable development and poverty alleviation. Their strong inclusion in the future development paradigm will be critical to its success.

2015 will be pivotal for defining the next phase of global development. It will also be the final year of implementation of the Eighth Country Programme. Through strong collaboration with government partners, lessons learned and best practices of the CP8 will provide a strong foundation for the next country programme.
